Besides the author, the person most responsible for the arrival of this book is Wynne Wong, who requested the first version of the manuscript of this book to be used as a primary text for a graduate seminar on second language vocabulary instruction at The Ohio State University. The manuscript has been used in two offerings of the seminar. I am very grateful to Wynne not only for her help in providing an initial impetus for writing the book but also for her consistent support and valuable feedback throughout the writing and revision process.

My appreciation also goes to Norbert Schmitt for his invaluable comments and encouragement at various stages of this project. Thank you also to TESOL Publications for accepting this project and especially to Carol Edwards, Publishing Manager at TESOL International Association, whose talent, cheerfulness, and encouragement made working on this project a delightful experience at every step of the way. My thanks also to the anonymous reviewers who helped shape the book manuscript and, in particular, to one anonymous reviewer working with TESOL Publications who provided a number of detailed suggestions for improving the book manuscript. Additionally, I am grateful to Leonardo Carvajal Gamarra for his practical commentary on the overall readability of the book manuscript.

Finally, I extend my gratitude to Jacqueline White Militello, Instructor in the English Language Program at Washington University in St. Louis, for her willingness to implement and provide helpful feedback on the approach to vocabulary instruction advocated in this book. Her dedication to her students and to effective language instruction, including careful attention to vocabulary development, is an inspiration.
